Learning focus

The Sixth Schedule of the Constitution provides special autonomous administrative arrangements for specified tribal areas in parts of Northeast India.

1. Autonomous District Councils and, where applicable, Regional Councils have powers in specified matters, which can include land, customary practices and local administration subject to constitutional limits.

2. Dima Hasao and Karbi Anglong have Autonomous District Councils under the Sixth Schedule framework. Their legal powers and administrative arrangements should be checked against current constitutional text and applicable state law.

3. The framework aims to protect local autonomy and customary practices while operating within the constitutional system of India.

4. Challenges may include resources, coordination with state departments, representation of diverse communities, accountability and clarity over overlapping jurisdiction.
