Learning focus

The President appoints the Prime Minister, normally the person able to command confidence in the Lok Sabha.

1. The Prime Minister leads the Council of Ministers, coordinates government policy, advises the President through the constitutional framework and represents the government in Parliament.

2. The Prime Minister's authority depends on parliamentary support, party leadership, Cabinet relationships, coalition arrangements and political circumstances.

3. The Prime Minister is central to agenda-setting but remains subject to constitutional limits, parliamentary scrutiny, elections and judicial review where applicable.

4. The role is both institutional and political: it connects the executive, legislature, party system and public leadership.
